They told us World War I destroyed empires —
but behind the chaos, it built something even bigger: modern capitalism itself — the turning point in financial history.

When the war began, the global banking system was collapsing.
By the time it ended, banks ruled the world through debt, control, and profit.
This is the untold story of how war didn't end capitalism… it saved it.

Discover how the collapse of 1914 became the foundation for today's financial system — how governments became clients of their own banks, and how every "crisis" since has strengthened the same institutions that once failed.

💰 The blueprint created in 1914 still shapes the modern world.
From the gold standard to central banks, from 1914 to 2008 — the pattern never changed.

📽️ Watch next: The Empire of Debt — the hidden sequel to this story.
